Why the Doorway to the Transcendent is Often

Unavailable: A Grail Perspective

Lecture by Ken Schmitz

Separation is an experience that defines our current culture. Separation politically, Separation religiously, Separation in communities, Separation in families, and most critically, Separation within our own psyche. In other words, we are living in the Waste Land.

The myth of Parzival and his search for the Grail not only gives us an incisive diagnosis of what ails us, but gives us a roadmap to heal the separation and participate in our own individuation. This presentation will explore this drama and will especially highlight our desire to experience the Transcendent.

Ken Schmitz has been a Jungian based psychotherapist for over 40 years. Ken is the author of Search for the Grail, www.searchforthegrail.com and Soul Stories From The Street, www.soulstoriesfromthestreet.com

A Journey into the Queen Archetype

Lecture by Claudia Schmitt, MDiv, Diplomate Jungian Analyst

A journey into the realm of the Queen archetype reveals the countless manifestations of the feminine dynamic. The eternal repetitions of her archetypal pattern have shaped, magnified, and propelled her powerful dynamic both in the external world and the inner psychological sphere. We witness the significance of her sovereignty in nature, in social systems, in myths, in fairy tales, in alchemy, the individual psyche, and in the Self. This presentation will explore these varied and fascinating dynamics of the Queen archetype.

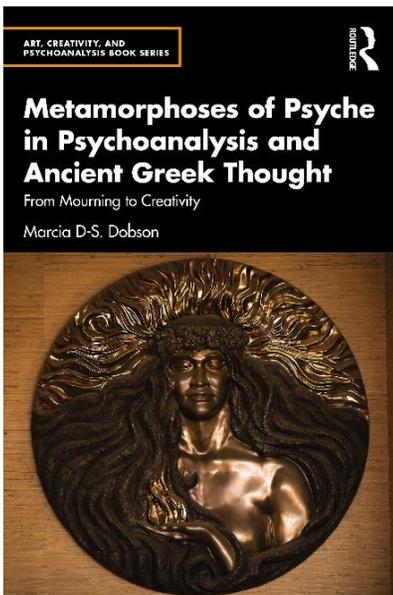

Claudia Schmitt, MDiv, is a diplomate Jungian Analyst (2020) trained through the C.G. Jung Institute of Colorado. She completed a double major in Psychology and Communications from California State University, Chico, and an MDiv degree from the Iliff School of Theology, Denver. Claudia has a part-time private practice and serves on the CGJIC Board. She is also a United Church of Christ minister for a church in Wheat Ridge, Colorado

Psychic Metamorphoses in Psychoanalysis and Ancient Greek Thought

Lecture by Marcia D-S. Dobson, Ph.D.

My talk will be based on my new book, which is in the process of being published. It is about creating a psyche that sees from the perspective of the liminal, honoring multiplicity as central to the creation of the whole person.

Living liminally or “on the threshold,” demands a poetic sensibility, and the courage always to be receptive to psychic experiences that open beyond the boundaries of sense, ego, and even common notions of what constitutes sanity. It means directing our attention to transitions rather than beginnings or endings and risking experiences of clairvoyance, hallucinations, fantasies, divine inspiration, psychic multiplicity, empathic fields, artistic inspiration, deep intimacies, and the bursting of light and spirit through them all.

This is what I want to share with you - and to elicit your own thoughts and experiences in return.

Looking back today, I find all my personal and intellectual forays have been about the same thing. Mine has not been so much a search for truth that keeps faltering along the way and continually seeking a new compass, but rather has developed into a confluence of themes that deepens and expands meanings as it constellates them, that runs from many streams into a single flowing river.

Marcia D-S. Dobson, Ph.D., has been an award-winning Professor of Classics at Colorado College for over forty years, where she specializes in ancient Greek language, drama, and mythology. She holds a second Ph.D. in psychology from Pacifica Graduate Institute, and co-chairs the Psychoanalysis Minor at Colorado College. Marcia has a private psychotherapeutic practice in Colorado Springs and is a former president of the Colorado Springs Jung Society.

The Guiding Spirit in Each of Our Dreams

Lecture by Christine Chapman, M.Psych (Clin), Alan Drymala, LPC, and Kathryn Kuisle, Ph.D.

This year we are continuing our exploration of the archetypal nature of our dreams, as revealed by a local dreamer. It's easy for dreamers to think that the images in their dreams are not archetypal, simply because the dream might not have the numinous quality of a big dream. Yet every dream image has an archetypal core. If we overlook this archetypal element of our dreams, then we are missing the huge healing, transformative, and also confronting energies that lie in the deeper layers of the psyche. The ego can rebel and demand the centrality of its own associations with dream images, not realizing that this is the starting place for further associations, not the end point. If we stay with the personal, then ultimately we risk staying stuck in the same old complexes in endless rotations.

But if we follow the hints and clues into the deeper symbolic material, then the dreamer's life itself can take on a whole new unexpected landscape. The archetypal world is not a mystery 'out there', to be sought through the instruction of experts from 'far away'. It lives right here, right now in each of us, and is communicated faithfully and repeatedly in our humble dreams.

This evening, we will explore a single dream with a local dreamer in conversation with her, so that we can discuss both the personal and archetypal nature of the dream images and how they mesh and interweave in their meanings to lead the dreamer in her individuation journey.
